

Sustainability Initiative

Overview

Sustainability is critical to ensuring the security of future generations and to the growth of the world economy. The market is responding to calls for environmental stewardship, and companies are developing solutions to the new challenges. Increasingly, our clients are leading the way. In response to the sustainability movement, Taft has created a Sustainability Initiative Team to counsel clients in this growing area.

Taft's Sustainability Initiative combines the best of Taft's extensive experience in established practice areas in the emerging sustainability law field. Our sustainability initiative assembles an experienced team to advise clients on all aspects of today's green business culture.

We counsel clients in acquisitions, zoning, siting requirements and procedures, utility regulatory issues, tax matters, environmental reviews and compliance, design and construction, and contractual matters. Taft works with some of the most experienced sustainability consultants in the world, covering architecture, engineering, construction, software management and environmental disciplines. Our attorneys have appeared before regulatory agencies and planning commissions across the United States.

We advise clients about climate change regulations and legislation, implementing clean and renewable energy technologies, green design and construction, sustainable real estate development, energy generation and efficiency opportunities, and the national and regional credit trading markets.

Thomas P. Vergamini

Practice Contact
(859) 547-4302
vergamini@taftlaw.com